As with much of Buzo's early work, "Norm and Ahmed" deals with alienation from society. Buzo uses the tension created by the disparate match of working class Norm with articulate, educated Ahmed to drive the action of the play and gradually reveal that Norm is just as alienated from his supposed native culture as the visitor.

His subsequent senseless beating of Ahmed also demonstrates Norm’s instability and violence and this further reinforces his outsider status. By breaking the laws of society, he automatically becomes an outsider to the mainstream. Norm and Mumble are not the only characters who are becoming outsiders in their own place.
